

Court Stands by Ban On Mansion for Addicts

Special to The New York Times

NEW HAVEN, Feb. 12—The Connecticut Supreme Court refused this week to allow reargument of an appeal in which it ruled that the Synanon Foundation could no longer use a Westport mansion as a rehabilitation center for narcotics addicts.

The state's highest court decided recently that the center violated a Westport zoning law limiting the exclusive Greens Farms residential section to one-family occupancy.

The court gave no reason for its refusal to permit a reargument.
